DIGITAL COMMUNITIES

Intellectual output 3: Handbook for community digital trainers

This output developed and piloted a Handbook with methods, tools and examples to develop trainers' skills in local community members in providing digital competence trainings and support to the elderly people in their communities. The objective is to provide local communities with better training methods and content tailored for their senior members and to increase capacity to commission digital inclusion and assisted digital support.

The Handbook is available in all partners' languages, and in English on the project website.

The Handbook for community digital trainers, produced by the partnership, was pilot tested in 5 local workshops (2 in Iceland in the different regions represented by both Icelandic partners, and one workshop in each of the other targeted countries – Sweden, Spain and Bulgaria), involving 75 target group participants in the pilot testing activities, aimed to develop trainers' skills in local community members in providing digital competence trainings and support senior citizens in their efforts to gain and/or improve their digital literacy.

A consolidated report including policy recommendations was drafted on the basis of the individual country reports. Common recommendations include F2F training to be ensured by local senior associations and adult education providers with the support from the regional/local level of government. Analyzing existing ICT courses for elderly people and awareness campaigns concerning IT public services have to continue with a view to overcoming digital gaps. Encouraging the volunteering of young people to spend some time explaining the digital technologies to elderly people.
